They apparently ruled together from 1353 to 1336 B.C. and had six daughters, with speculation that they may have also had a son. Nefertiti was powerful and her husband treated her as an equal. In several monuments she is shown wearing the crown of a pharaoh. In the National Museum in Berlin, an entire room is set-aside for Nefertiti. Her beautiful and the famous bust [a sculpture representing a person's head, shoulders, and upper chest] of Nefertiti is one of the most iconic symbols of Egypt. In the National Geographic on December 18, 2015, A. R. Williams wrote the following:

"Every time something is discovered in Egypt's Valley of the Kings, the whispers begin. Is it the queen? Has she finally been found? They're asking about Nefertiti, the legendary beauty who was married to one of ancient Egypt's strangest pharaohs. Her burial site has never been found, and its location is one of the enduring mysteries in Egyptology."
